

Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat

We were treated to a wonderful afternoon or evening of entertainment at the end of June.

Love to Sing and the MAD Company joined forces to bring Joseph to us. Under the direction of Vanessa they didn't put a foot wrong (at least not to my untrained ear.)

It was good to have a variety of narrators and all of them sang with confidence and clarity. This is so important when they are telling a story.

The chorus was strong and also clear so that all the words could be heard. Congratulations to the men who coped well with some tricky songs.

Tatum as Joseph, gave a confident and strong lead throughout the whole performance. A ripple of excitement went round the audience when Peter came forward as Pharaoh. He didn't disappoint us and gave us a brilliant "Elvis" getting an extra loud round of applause.

The different coloured waistcoats worn by the cast were very effective as was the bunting.

The logistics of fitting in all the cast on the platform must have been a challenge as was the chairs for the audience.

Well done Sue for organising all that and putting everything back for the service the next day.

Credit also must go to the supporting front of house staff who met us with a smile and showed us to our seats and to all the others behind the scenes. Well done to everyone. Thank you to you all for the wonderful show. What's next?
